Combating Pandemic Fatigue

An unintentional phenomenon is on the rise—pandemic fatigue. People are tired of staying at home. People want to be the social creatures they inherently are. People want their “normal” back.

This collective fatigue is making some people—consciously or unconsciously—disregard pandemic guidance such as social distancing and mask wearing. Others may be reaching a mental health breaking point.

Recent data from a University of Toronto survey revealed the psychological toll taken by the pandemic. Of the 1,431 doctorate and master’s students polled, 72 per cent reported experiencing worsening mental health as a result of the pandemic. Furthermore, 25 per cent reported considering a leave of absence from their education.

If you feel like you’re battling pandemic fatigue and losing self-discipline, stay the course with these coping tips:

- Try a new exercise. If you’ve been finding it harder to exercise, try it with something new like

Try meditation, virtual activities can help lower your stress levels and improve your mood.

- Try saying it out loud. Sometimes you just need to talk to someone about how you’re feeling, especially if you’re stressed, frustrated or anxious. Ignoring those strong feelings won’t make them go away.
- Try new recipes. You’ve likely already mastered the pandemic sourdough or banana bread, so roll up your sleeves and whip up something else. This is a good time to prepare healthier meals and use that time as a fun daily activity for you and your family.

Consider how you relaxed pre-pandemic, and try to get back to that lifestyle. If you find cooking, reading or listening to music relaxing, make time to keep that a part of your routine.

If you’re worried about your mental well-being, please contact your doctor.

Benefits of Buying Seasonal Produce

In today's market, it's normal to see the same produce available year-round. However, that doesn't mean the quality is the same throughout the seasons. Eating seasonally means you are simply taking advantage of the harvest schedule and enjoying produce at its peak. For this time of year, that includes foods with rich fall colours like burnt orange, deep burgundy and hunter green.

Shop for seasonal produce and reap the following benefits:

- Fresher food—Seasonal produce likely is recently picked and hasn't been sitting on a truck or in a warehouse for weeks.
- Better taste—In-season produce retains its nutritional value and tastes better, sweeter and perfectly ripe. If the produce is tasty, you'll likely eat more of it. That's a healthy win-win.
- Lower costs—When produce is in season, farmers harvest larger crops. The increased supply may mean lower prices for you.
- Reduced carbon footprint—Out-of-season produce is typically imported or takes more energy to grow due to the need for greenhouses.

It's called harvest season for a reason, so there should be plenty of fresh produce options available at your local farmers market or grocery store.

What's Growing?

This month, consider buying fruits and veggies that are in season.

How to Stay Physically Active

Due to social distancing and gym closures, it may be tougher to be active. People are home more and likely indulging in sedentary activities—like sitting, watching TV or spending time in front of other electronic devices.

Instead of binge-watching your favourite show, consider these tips for staying active:

- Get moving. Anything counts! Don't focus on running or working out in a gym. Grocery shopping and cleaning the house count as exercise.
- Go at your own pace. Ease into exercise and slowly increase as you build up your stamina.
- Listen to your body. You know yourself best. If you start to feel dizzy or experience pain, stop and take a break.
